Trump has improved on his performance from 2020 in both red states and blue states. He has flipped Georgia and Pennsylvania and needs only one more state to win. Alaska, which has not voted for a Democrat in 60 years, would put him over the top.

Which states will decide the election?

These seven states, which account for 93 electoral college votes, are likely to decide the winner of the election. Harris needs 44 of these battleground electoral votes to win the election, assuming both candidates win all of the states where polls show them with significant leads. Trump needs 51.

How our forecast has changed

These charts show how our forecast has changed over the course of the night. As a rule, when the electoral vote estimate is steady in the presence of new results, our forecast is more trustworthy.

Estimate of final electoral vote count

The lines below include a shaded range showing our model's uncertainty. As more results are reported, the uncertainty around the estimates will narrow.
